Fig Varieties

"Celeste types" are the typical heirloom / heritage "Celeste" cultivars, e.g., Celeste, Blue Celeste, Black Celeste, Sweet Diana, etc.

The Hybrids produced by LSU are "Seedlings" that are individual and distinct cultivars, e.g., Golden Celeste / Champagne, improved Celeste / O'Rourke, Improved Celeste / ICON,

"Celeste type" cultivars / varieties have the same or similar leaf morphology and figs, the slight variations are only usually in size and color, even those vary / differ with ambient growing conditions, location and season. I've grown out about seven (7) different "Celeste type" cultivars (including Blue Celeste and a Tissue Cultured) and they have all produced similar leaves and similar tasting figs.

fig size is definitely one of the major cons of Celeste. The average size is ~ 15 gms (typically range between 10 - 19 gms each), but the Sugar flavor figs are very sweet when fully ripe and remind me of Dates.

Mount Etna types like Hardy Chicago are twice the size for the same effort
